DURING the past few years every college administrator has been made unpleasantly aware of the fact that admissions policies are in part dependent on funds available for scholarship aid. Rising prices affect educational costs, as well as household budgets, with the result that it costs more to educate one's children at the same time that heads of families, as the result of inflation and taxes, find it more difficult to finance the college education for son or daughter. I believe it to be true for all New England colleges that each year a larger percentage of applicants seeks scholarship aid.

Scholarship funds come from three sources at Middlebury. They are:

1. Income from funds given by individuals to establish endowed scholarships. During the fiscal year ending June 1951 the following new endowed scholarships were established; the Fullam Memorial Scholarship Fund $5000., the William H. Porter Memorial Scholarship $10,000., the Frederick V. Jones Scholarship Fund $10,000. Middlebury at the close of the last fiscal year had $346,734. in funds earmarked for scholarships and the College received $14,688. in income from such funds. This amount was paid out for scholarships in accordance with the terms of the donors, if the funds were given with restrictions. Many of the funded scholarships must be awarded to students from certain localities or to students who satisfy qualifications outlined by the donor.

2. Funds for scholarships come from current gifts to be expended annually for scholarships. The current Middlebury Alumni Fund Drive is the only large source of such gifts. Alumni and Alumnae groups from time to time donate funds for a regional scholarship. In some colleges many regional groups of Alumni provide a scholarship for a boy or girl from the locality in which the group is organized.

3. Scholarship Funds are derived from annual operating income of the College. In effect, this means that a student is charged full tuition of $600. but is credited with a scholarship which reduces the amount of tuition collected by Middlebury. Whenever the College reduces tuition charges in this manner it is losing income by the amount of the total reduction in tuition charges. For the past academic year $15,819. of scholarships awarded represented a loss of income that could have been used to improve instructional and educational services for students. It is very much to be hoped that eventually the annual alumni fund plus income from endowed scholarships will provide sufficient funds for all of our scholarship needs.

The question is sometimes asked: "What number of Middlebury students should receive scholarship aid?" or "Just how much money should be made available for scholarship purposes?" It is not easy to answer such questions. Ideally the College should be in a position to choose the type of student it desires without reference to the financial ability of the applicant to pay his full tuition and other charges.

Historically, small independent colleges have in a sense been able to do this by keeping tuition and board and room charges relatively low. Today the small college, facing inflationary costs, can only avoid operating deficits by substantially increasing tuition and other charges. Therefore, if we are to choose students on merit without relation to financial status we must have available more funds for scholarship grants. At present we need approximately forty thousand dollars in annual gifts for scholarships to support our current scholarship program from gifts, plus income from endowed scholarships.

All of those who are giving of their time and effort to make the Middlebury Alumni Fund Drive successful believe that all Middlebury men and women are in sympathy with the desire of the College to provide more scholarship aid for deserving students.

California Alumni Hold Reunion in Los Angeles

The first meeting of the Middlebury Alumni Association of Southern California was held during the late fall in Los Angeles.

Dr. E. C. Cole, '15, a member of the College Board of Trustees addressed the group informally, bringing the members up-to-date on the latest news of Middlebury. After dinner, the group gathered around the piano and sang college songs, graciously accompanied by Mrs. Margaret Mills Ockels, '15. A short and very informal business meeting followed, at which it was decided to hold a family picnic in Los Angeles in the Spring.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. John D. Allen, '49 (Ruth Caldroney, '48); Mrs. Nellie Hadley Simmons, '01, wife of a former college trustee and mother of a present trustee, and her daughter Mrs. Barbara Bris; Dr. and Mrs. Joseph P. McCormack, '07, author of that fine football song, "Panther of Middlebury"; Mrs. Ruth Greeley Barnes, '16; Mr. and Mrs. Olaf A. Bolm, (Jean Butterfield, '42); Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cone, (Beatrice Oetjen, '49); Mr. and Mrs. Rollin R. Crane, '24; Mr. Rodman A. Frank, '44; Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Kasper, '45 (Shirley Root, '48); Mr. John H. Martin, '36; Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth MacClelland, '30; Mrs. Margaret Mills Ockels, '15; Mrs. Myrtle Bain Williams, '15.

Services of N. Y. Bureau Available to Alumnae

The Placement Office of Middlebury College has made available to graduating seniors and Alumnae the services of the "Women's Placement Bureau." The Bureau is located at 541 Madison Avenue, New York City. Miss Alice Gore King, Director, is prepared to render valuable assistance to any Middlebury graduates wishing to locate positions in or around the metropolitan area. These same services are also available to anyone wishing to relocate in this same area.

The services of the bureau are free to those Middlebury Alumnae who register. The Bureau's revenue comes from two sources. Half of the money for the support of the office is provided by the member Colleges of the Bureau; the remainder of the financial support comes from businesses in the New York City area that are anxious to recruit College women for positions. There are twelve member Colleges.

Any Middlebury Alumnae wishing to use the services of the bureau should call Miss King for a screening interview. After the initial personal interview, the bureau will make arrangements for interviews with business organizations.

Teamwork

"Teamwork" is the keynote of the 1951–52 Middlebury College Alumni Fund Drive for scholarship aid because it is that kind of project. Now is the time for the men and women of Middlebury to rally to the aid of their Alma Mater.

There are one hundred ten active workers in the Alumni Fund Drive this year. They have the responsibility of contacting nearly 7,000 Alumni-ae by letter, telephone or conference and impressing upon each one individually the desirability of this drive for scholarships with a larger-than-usual contribution.

The needs and purpose of the Drive have been set forth and explained in previous publications, letters and the NEWS LETTER. The goal established is large only if it must be met by an active and interested minority of the Alumni-ae.

The task of getting the appeal of this campaign to nearly 7,000 Alumni-ae is arduous only if undertaken by too few. The basis on which the Alumni Fund Drive operation has been organized imposes an oppressive burden on none, if all (as they have in the past and will now) apply themselves to the specific job assigned.

From the grandstands the modern game of football impresses the spectator as complicated, obscure and involved. The player on the gridiron, however, if his team has been trained with skill and precision, understands the role he must play in every move and if each member of the team performs his function successfully they advance down the field to the goal.

The success of teamwork does not depend upon any intangibles. There are no hazards that cannot be foreseen; no acts of God are required to permit it to skin through by grace. Middlebury men and women are inherently loyal to and proud of their institution. Its survival intact through critical times is a matter of concern to more than we may realize. If all the members of our team see the men and women on their list and make sure that they understand the problem, their solid synchronization in this united effort will make the raising of $20,000 for Scholarships a most important reality.

The Big Game, Mountain Style

IT POURED rain on the eve of battle and plans were abandoned for a bonfire and snake dance after the pep rally in the gym. The weather, however, didn't discourage the rooters of the University of Vermont, come down to Middlebury for the last and biggest game of the football season in the Green Mountain country.

Red Smith

It takes a great deal to dismay either side in this annual meeting. Last year, for instance, Vermont wasn't conceded much chance, yet brought off a monumental upset, 24 to 7. This year, Middlebury was the favorite again, having won three times in seven starts. Vermont had played six and lost six, but the young men from Burlington had scored twice, making seven points against St. Michael's while St. Michael's was making forty-one, and six against New Hampshire, who scored fifty-four.

Late into Friday night, jalopies prowled the campus. Spotlights played upon dormitory windows. There were shouts in the rainy darkness. In the morning there were big yellow "Vs" painted on the trees and buildings and mail boxes. In theory, freshman task forces combat such attacks by mechanized cavalry, but the Middlebury war machine is imperfect. Another season on the eve of the Vermont game, an enterprising but inconsiderate photographer made a picture that subsequently appeared in the Middlebury "Campus." It showed two sentries sound asleep on the chapel steps, their nightsticks dangling from nerveless hands.

Pure Vermont Mud

SNOW fell Saturday in big, wet flakes. Spectators waded squishily to the box office, bought general admission tickets—Middlebury doesn't bother with reserved seats—and spread newspapers or blankets where they chose on the muddy planks of the bleachers flanking Porter Field. A wind whipped across the field, plucked overcoat collars open and stuffed melting snow into the apertures.

Grayness blotted out horizons. This far valley between the Green Mountains and the Adirondacks was shut off in a world of its own. A million light years away, 45,000 fans were cheering Princeton's Dick Kazmaier, 80,000 were watching Ohio State and Illinois, almost 60,000 sat in Michigan Stadium.

Only the players seemed unaware of the mud, the snow and the cold. They went down wallowing in the primeval ooze, got up shaking big gobs of muck from their paws, and hustled back into another scrimmage. Middlebury made a touchdown the first time it got the ball. The home forces added another, then Vermont went across, making the score 13 to 6. This looked closer than anticipated and excitement mounted, but a pretty fourth-down pass play made it 19 to 6 one second before the half ended.

Everybody seemed to know everybody else. Between halves they wandered around visiting, stomping the cold from their feet. Toddlers in bright snow suits and galoshes paddled through puddles on the sidelines. Nobody herded them back when the teams came out for the second half. A man pushing a baby carriage through the mud followed the play, hurrying along the sideline as the Middlebury team ran up the score.

The Princeton System, Refined

EVERY few minutes a kid named Worthington or Allen or Zabriskie would break loose and the Middlebury stands would rise in a shouting confusion of bright color. Gals of the senior class carried canes to the Vermont game, replicas of the walking stick favored by Gamaliel Painter, who founded the college in 1800. Whenever Middlebury scored, they brandished the canes ferociously. They did a lot of brandishing. The final score was 51 to 12. After its two touchdowns Vermont kept unsullied its record of missing every extra point against Middlebury since 1942.

There was some remarkable running in the treacherous bog and some astonishing passing with a greasy ball. A tall Middlebury end named Sonny Dennis leaped for passes, and when the ball spurted away from him like wet soap in the bathtub, he juggled and caught it again on the run. Vermont played the T formation; Middlebury's coach, Duke Nelson, employed the single wing attack with buck-lateral sequences favored by his friend Charley Caldwell, of Princeton.

"But," Nelson said, "Charley runs it with Kazmaier. We use the same book, but we're still on page three. This is about like intra-mural football, except that the varsity players get to put in a little more time at it. Not an awful lot more time at that. For two weeks in the spring we practiced indoors about three times a week. In the fall a kid misses practice if he has a lab period, because, well, that's what he's here for.

"Our kids aren't great football players physically. But we ask them to think. If you can get 'em started thinking, then they play better football and it becomes a game and they have some fun. That's my notion, anyway."

The Team That Tied Harvard

ACROSS the campus, the bell in the old chapel started to ring. Because Middlebury had won, it would ring for three hours, with a detail of freshmen pulling the rope.

Arthur Brown, the athletic director, was telling of the days when Middlebury regularly played opponents like Harvard, Yale, Army and Penn State. One year the opener was lost to Harvard by something like 55 to 0, the game to Yale by about 60 to 0, and about that time an idea took shape that Middlebury was out of its class. Still and all, they do remember the year Harvard was tied.

"Our president then was Dwight Moody," Mr. Brown said. "He telephoned to ask the score. '6 to 6,' I told him. '66 to what?' he asked."

Hats Off To The Women's Forum!

By Mrs. Egdar J. Wiley, '12, Director, Middlebury Community House

It is felt that too little is known specifically among Alumni, Alumnae, and friends of Middlebury College about the wonderful work carried on by a student organization named rather cryptically, and simply as "The Forum." Hence the opportunity has graciously been offered me to lay before the readers of the News Letter the salient facts concerning Forum and its surprisingly diversified activities.

My first contact with this worthy organization came when, as Director of the Middlebury Village Community House, it devolved upon me to cooperate with Forum. One of the most delightful phases of my responsibilities at the House has been this opportunity to become acquainted with Forum members and to come to realize the high motives and generous impulses which prompt their activities.

The aim of this organization, formed a little over a decade ago, to which any woman student of Middlebury College is eligible, is social work, and work with children, particularly the underprivileged. The annual dues are a dollar, and all monies go to help those in need. The membership runs between 250 and 300 students. The recipients of Forum monetary benefactions are as widely separated as Vermont and Greece.

First let me be specific about their good work in Middlebury. During the past college year (1950–1951) under the able leadership of Jean Maintain '51, Newtonville, Mass., and her committee, beautiful Thanksgiving baskets were prepared and distributed to a number of deserving local families, and lonely elderly people, as well as to the residents of the Town Farm. Mary Louise Krum '51 with the assistance of Jean Hosford '52 both from Shaker Heights, Ohio, with their committee made arrangements for a Christmas party for the children of Ripton; Santa, tree, presents, and plenty to eat.

Another use of Forum funds in Middlebury is to provide at least one unusual entertainment feature annually for the children of Addison County, such as a first-rate puppet show or a concert. Hundreds of boys and girls attend these affairs with the rural school children being brought in cars, or school buses, to join with the Middlebury children in sharing the delights of the occasion. The enjoyment of these young people is, to say the least, not inhibited and leaves no doubt as to their appreciation. Carolyn Johnson '51 of Plainfield, Vt., and Ruth Eldridge '52 of Newton Highlands, Mass., made the arrangements for a puppet show this past year.

A recent Forum contribution to welfare concerns the sick and convalescent. At an expense of nearly a hundred dollars, a mobile book-wagon was built by a Middlebury carpenter and presented by the Forum to Porter Hospital and is kept stocked with recent books and current periodicals. A couple of days each week Forum girls, headed by Jane Yates '51, West Palm Beach, Florida, tended to the wagon, circulating about to the hospital rooms dispensing reading matter to any who desired it.

Some of the Forum's money goes into the College Campus Community Chest which takes care of student contributions to various philanthropic financial drives.

Away from Middlebury some Forum funds have been allocated annually for several years to pay a Town of Middlebury boy's tuition in The Kurn Hattin Home at Westminster, Vermont. "Care" packages have been sent abroad and a scholarship from Forum has made it possible for a young Greek student to attend the University of Athens in Greece.

To supplement their resources for all these benefactions, Nancy Watters '52, Holden, Mass., and a student committee issued a beautiful (1950–1951) pictorial engagement calendar in book form with views of the College. Eleanor Wampler '51 of Syracuse, N. Y. was in charge of sales promotion. These calendars are published annually as a regular Forum project.

Now we come to what the Forum girls give that it would take much money to buy, but which they give freely on a purely volunteer basis, and that is personal service. Some years ago a scheme was worked out by the Forum girls and Miss Olive Dean, then Director of the Community House, which has proven to be mutually beneficial, and which is still in operation.

The girls, with diverse talents and training, some potential entertainers, or aspiring children's librarians, some potential nursery school teachers or teachers of Arts and Crafts, [Continued on page 15]

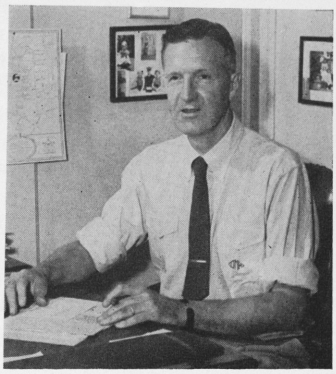
A Journey to Israel

By D. Howard Moreau, '20

One may hope to acquire no more than casual knowledge of a new country in ten days, even tho that country is ever so tiny and every door to information is wide open.

Israel is a small country—about the size of New Jersey. But so many things are happening in Israel that even a citizen, who speaks the language and is well informed on the nation's background, cannot hope to keep up with it all.



D. Howard Moreau, '20

The Israeli are in a half-decade trying to accomplish what it has taken America 150 years to bring about. Nowhere else in the world will one find such feverish activity or evidence of greater achievement. Nowhere is there a nation fighting against greater odds. Nowhere a more splendid display of energy, determination, courage and charitable impulse. The objective is not only a haven of refuge for the oppressed, but also a land of opportunity under a government of, for and by the people. To bring this about there must be peace in this part of the world which has so often, since the beginnings of civilization, been torn by conflict. There must be economic stability, and this in a country that has, to say the most, very limited natural resources.

The writer, early in the late spring, spent ten days in Israel as a guest of El Al Israel Airlines, a new venture in transportation which reflects the spirit of modern Israel. This little country, but three years old, was already making a bid for a share of the world's travel dollars. Started almost immediately after the truce with Arab neighbors, EL AL Airlines had been serving the eastern Mediterranean countries, but now it was extending its service westward to America and southward to Johannesburg. Truly an ambitious project.

Ours was a newspaper junket. The decision to take along the editor of a country weekly newspaper was made on the advice of EL AL's engineering consultant, who had helped to work out the limitless details and ramifications that go with establishing a new airline that was to cross new frontiers, overcome even more serious difficulties in penetrating countries that had set up long-standing regulations and obstructions. Fourteen of us made the journey, representing metropolitan and small city dailies, national magazines, press services and one of the great radio chains.

Thirty and a half hours after our Constellation took off from Idlewild we were at Lydda Airport. We had been in the air twenty-five hours, having stopped at Gander, London and Rome en route.

America has been called the melting pot, Israel the pressure cooker. At Lydda Airport one is immediately aware of Israel's great problem of receiving and assimilating the hundreds of thousands of people that have come for refuge and rehabilitation. Descending in the cloudless morning sky we could see hundreds and hundreds of new dwellings, many of them one-room temporary metal-covered huts, arranged in orderly pattern over the brown landscape.

At Lydda Operation Flying Carpet and Operation Ali Baba have their nerve centers. Here big DC-4s, operating on a round-the-clock schedule were depositing their cargoes of men, women and children, who appear bewildered but ever so grateful for safe arrival in the land of promise and hope. We saw a single plane, which a few hours before had left Baghdad, deposit 115 people of various ages, some babes in arms, some ill and decrepid, on the airstrip. Seventy thousand had been brought in from Iraq alone in four months by Operation Ali Baba. By this method Israel had doubled its population since the fighting was halted in May, 1948, bringing the total to 1,300,000.

We were to travel from Beersheba well nigh up to Dan in the next week and a half and to see at close range the effort that is being made to get these new people established, teach most of them a new language and integrate them into the economy of their adopted land. In the space available one can only sketch the history that is in the making in Israel.

AT ANCIENT CAESAREA residents of a kibbutz, or communal farm, have used their slender means to erect this little museum to house items of earlier civilizations they have plowed up in their fields. The museum is a memorial to a young Israeli who gave her life as a spy for the Allies in World War II. Nearby, a bulldozer in leveling a field recently unearthed a beautiful red granite statue of the wife of one of the Caesars.

What contrasts one finds in Israel! Here one finds people living as they did while part of the Bible was yet unwritten, living somewhat poorer perhaps than when Jesus of Nazareth brought His still unheeded message of peace and good will to Galilee.

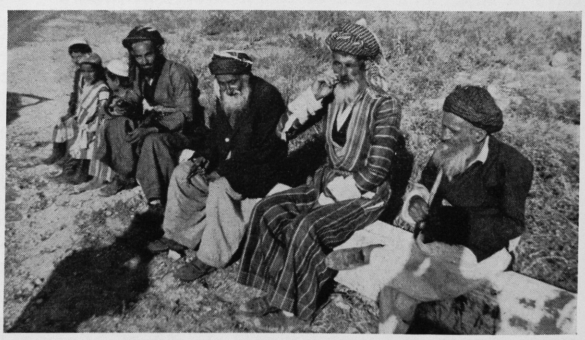
Down in the Negev desert, on the road to Beersheba, we encountered Bedouins, with their camels and donkeys, their tents scattered over the hills like so many giant black caterpillars. They were living as nomad tribes have lived for countless generations, except that their sheik sported a 1951 Packard sedan and their children begged cigarettes.

Tel Aviv is strictly a modern city which has risen on the arid shores of the Mediterranean north of ancient Jaffa in forty years. It has all the conveniences and inconveniences of a modern, crowded city—all the shortages of housing, hotel accommodations, parking space and room for traffic. On its outskirts are hundreds of new apartment houses, all monotonously alike, resembling chests of drawers with some of the drawers pulled out for balconies. Many are half finished. New factories are going up at a fast pace.

Our hotel, the Kaete Dan, overlooking Tel Aviv's sparkling and lovely waterfront boulevard, boasted its own expansion program. Slumbers were rudely interrupted the morning after arrival by what our roommate, who understood the language, described as the most skillfully arranged and liberally seasoned line of Yiddish cusswords he had heard, in a lifetime in Manhattan. Our watch, adjusted to Tel Aviv time the night before, said 6 a.m. but the cement mixer below was already grinding away and men with picks and shovels were hard at work, not even halting to absorb the construction boss's early morning briefing. Members of our party had occasion frequently to remark, as we motored over Israel, that nobody—nobody at all, was idle. Every person seems to be inspired with the idea that on him and him alone depends the success or failure of this great pioneering venture. We saw hundreds bearing tell-tale evidence of hardship in concentration camps on their faces and the unmistakable evidence that they had been treated as other than human beings in the tatoo numbers on their forearms. What if the difficulties were insurmountable in Israel—they would, they must win!

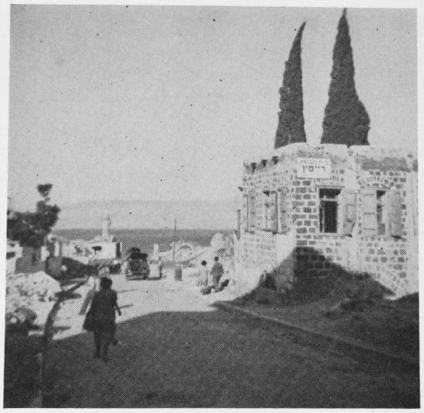
Israel hopes to produce enough food for her expected 2,000,000 people. And she is well on the road to achieving that goal. Winter's scant rainfall had made the grain which we saw huge combines harvesting, woefully short, but the time would come when irrigation would end this threat.

Where watered, the desert blooms. Israel's climate is much like that of Southern California, but with variations. It can produce any food commodity we produce in America. Only water is needed.



THESE MEN ARE NOT NATIVES OF ISRAEL but Iraquian Jews who recently arrived in "Operation Ali Baba" an air lift that has brought in 70,000 immigrants from that country. These orthodox Jews subscribe to the commandment "Thou shalt make no graven image" and shun cameras. The writer's $2.75 Brownie was too quick for them.

Israel has a socialist government, by choice and necessity. For under no other type of government would it be possible to do so much with so little, so quickly. To bring precious water from great depths or to pipe it from the Jordan and make it available to areas cleared and reclaimed from the deserts, requires capital and organization. In the limited river bottom areas, drainage projects must be conducted on a large scale. This calls for national, coupled with local cooperative and communal effort.



LOOKING TOWARD THE SEA OF GALILEE in Tiberias. Thousands of immigrants are being settled in this area, where the fresh waters of the lake are being used for irrigation, bringing new productivity to the rich Jordan River bottom land. Tiberias was the winter resort of the Roman rulers. Several hundred feet below sea level, it is warmer than other areas, very hot in summer.

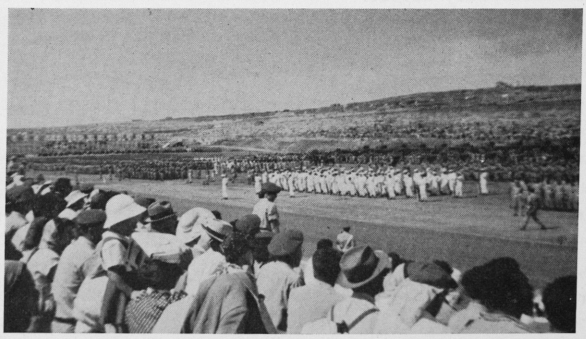
The kibbutzim, or communal farms, double as places of security, where men of military experience work and where at a moment's notice they can take up arms to protect their families and their country's extended borders. Some of the older of the kibbutzim and the cooperative farms are extremely prosperous. Their fields yield six and seven crops of alfalfa and clover a year; their vineyards and citrus orchards are lush, their vegetable gardens highly productive. And in the older Jewish settlements are many privately owned and very prosperous farms, which illustrate what can be done. These communal settlements, as rapidly as they can do so, absorb more immigrants. Members of the community own nothing personally, not even the shirts on their backs. They must sacrifice to care for their brethren, arriving at the rate of 30,000 a month.

New plants are being erected in all the large centers. The powerful Histadrut, or Federation of Labor, is both a great union of workers, skilled and unskilled, and an employer of thousands of men and women in its own manufacturing plants and construction projects. Where only limited private capital is available, the Histadrut utilizes the savings of its thousands of members to finance new factories and farms.

Children of Israel are the hope of the nation. It is thru them that cultural unity will ultimately be attained. They are taught Hebrew, the official language, which is the ancient Hebrew brought up to date by the addition of hundreds of new words—not a few of them imported from America and not remote in derivation from our slang.

Tel Aviv has in its center a new opera house. Jerusalem and Haifa have university and technological schools of graduate and undergraduate level. Great emphasis is being put on education and on sustaining the cultures of the immigrant population, which comprise something like thirty language groups from every part of the world. There is no Israeli type. One sees all kinds, from blond Northern Europeans to dark-skinned Yemenites from Southern Arabia.

We were impressed by the sincerity, the ability and modesty of the top leaders of government and industry with whom our party held press conferences. Israel's economy today is far from balanced. She needs large amounts of capital to absorb the new people and to make it possible for them to work and support their families. She needs peace and relief from costs attendant with supporting universal military training as well as a considerable and very competent force under arms. Her greatest asset is the spirit of her people.



INDEPENDENCE DAY PARADE at Jerusalem. Israel's great problem is to remain at peace with her Arab neighbors. The little country has too large a standing army for its size. It also has universal military training, a heavy drain on a nation that is absorbing immigrants at the rate of 30,000 a month and has a serious unbalance of trade. The Third Independence Day was one of great jubilation and the Israeli could point to tremendous accomplishment since the armistice in 1948.

The Graduate Schools of French and Spanish Abroad

By Dr. Stephen A. Freeman

PARIS: Middlebury College is now located not only among the green hills of Vermont, but also in the green valley of the Seine at Paris, and on the brilliant Castilian plateau at Madrid. Middlebury, long internationally known, is now genuinely international through the establishment three years ago of the Middlebury College Graduate School of French in France, and last year, of the Graduate School of Spanish in Spain. This development was the logical outcome of the flourishing Language Schools on Middlebury's Vermont campus, where students are trained in a fluent possession of the foreign language and in an understanding of its literature and culture, but which never pretended to be a substitute for actual residence and study in the foreign country itself.

Forty-two students have therefore gone this year from Middlebury in Vermont to Middlebury in Paris, enrolled as candidates for the Middlebury College Master's degree, and studying under Middlebury direction at the University of Paris. Similarly, twenty-one students are working under the Middlebury sign at the University of Madrid, putting to the practical test the preparation they have received in Vermont. At the end of the year, those who succeed in the rigorous examinations given by the French or Spanish university professors will find their results equated in terms of American grades and semester hours, and the credits applied toward a Middlebury degree.

It is the common experience of the young American student arriving at a large European university, that he is bewildered by the great dissimilarity of European and American universities. Both in psychological approach, and in organization, the differences are most confusing. Courses of instruction are offered, not as separate units, each with its own final examination, but as parts of a total program preparing the student for an examination, often competitive, at the end of a year or two. Attendance records are rarely kept. Little guidance is given to the student for his study outside of class. The program required for one of the state examinations does not ordinarily correspond to an American student's needs or interests. At the end of a year, whatever official recognition of his study he may have been able to secure is not usually accepted by American universities or school boards, and corresponds to nothing in the American school system.

The Middlebury Graduate Schools Abroad solve in a single plan both of the difficulties described above. With the encouragement of President Stratton and the trustees, and aided by a grant from the Carnegie Foundation, the writer came to France in January 1949 to investigate the possibility of realizing a long-cherished dream. Hearty cooperation was received from the French government and university authorities, and the bases of the organization were soon laid. In October 1949, forty-five students, after a preparatory summer at Middlebury, came to Paris under the direction of Professor Claude Bourcier, Dean of the French Summer School, during the first semester, as the pioneering group. Mlle Germaine Brée, Professor of French at Bryn Mawr College, supervised the group in the second semester, after Prof. Bourcier's return to Middlebury.

In the year 1950–1951, fifty-six students were enrolled in the Paris group under the direction of Prof. Vincent Guilloton of Smith College, Director of the French Summer School, for the first semester; succeeded in the second semester by Mlle Jeanne Boucoiran, formerly of the French office of the Relations Culturelles, and a member of the Middlebury French Summer School staff in 1948 and 1949. This year, the writer is directing the group for the first semester, and Mlle Boucoiran will again take over the reins after his return to Middlebury at the end of January.

The students spend the academic year from October to June studying in a coordinated program of advanced instruction on French linguistics, phonetics, literature, history, institutions, and culture. These courses are followed in several institutes or branches of the University of Paris, such as the Ecole Supérieure de Préparation de Professeurs, the Institut de Phonétique, the Institut Britannique, and others. The schedule of work is chosen with the aid and approval of the Middlebury director, so that the previous preparation received at Middlebury is taken into account, and so that the Middlebury degree requirements are fulfilled. The actual enrollment in the university is made by the Middlebury director, and he receives reports on the work of each student. At the close of the year, final examinations are administered by the French institutes, but in concert with the Middlebury director; and the successful candidates receive the Middlebury College Master of Arts degree.

The success of the School in Paris indicated the establishment of a similar school in Spain. With the special support of friends of the college, Dr. del Rio, Director of the Middlebury Spanish Summer School, went to Madrid last winter to lay the foundations of such an organization. In September, twenty-one students, after a summer at Middlebury, gathered at Madrid, and are enrolled there under the supervision of Dr. Margarita de Mayo, Chairman of the Spanish Dept. of Vassar College, and a member of the Middlebury Spanish Summer Session from 1925 to 1933. Dean Samuel Guarnaccia of the Spanish School has supervised the recruiting of students and assures the liaison with Middlebury. The plan of study and the organization of courses are similar to those of the school in Paris. The writer spent a week at Madrid with the school in late November, and found the students enthusiastic about the instruction they are receiving, and about their immersion in a completely different social [Continued on page 15]

Contemporary Civilization at Middlebury College

By Professor Waldo H. Heinrichs

In the Middlebury College Catalogue for 1922–23 there appeared the first announcement of a new course offering in these words, "Contemporary Civilization is not a department of the College but a survey course which each freshman is required to take in order to become more familiar with the problems confronting our civilization. The College is convinced that each college student should know the great problems facing the present age and should know the different theories set forth as possible solutions. During the course about one hundred problems in economics, sociology, science and education will be considered. The conclusions reached in this course will not be final, for it is not intended that the students shall feel that he has yet learned sufficient knowledge to have a definite and final solution in mind. It is intended that the student will be impressed with the needs of his generation and that he will prepare his education and his life to perform intelligently his duties as a citizen and a member of society." The wording of the announcement was cautious and yet optimistic.

That freshmen class of 1926 at Middlebury, which first took the new course, numbered 118 men out of 271 in college and about 110 women out of 267—well over half the total College enrollment. Professor Julius Stanton Kingsley, A.M., M.S., PD.M., with the title of Professor of Secondary Education, came to our campus from Columbia where a course with the same title was offered, to conduct it here under the Department of Education.

By 1925–26 "Professor Kingsley and assistants" made the interesting announcement that the course would now cover only forty problems, but added the field of government to the original four. The catalogue announcement said that "fifty periodicals and several hundred books are used in this course." It was administered in "three recitations and one lecture per week. Two fifths of this course was spent in getting a historical background of the present age." Thus, after five years trial, the proportion of background to current material was fairly rigidly fixed.

Since then the nature of the Contemporary Civilization course has been constantly evolving. In 1930–31 the catalogue described it as "a course in which the first semester is devoted to scientific and the second to social concepts of our civilization." In the summer of 1934 the College suffered a great loss when Professor Kingsley suddenly died. It fell to his successors to carry on this comprehensive course, and for a time this was done by Professor Russell Sholes and an instructor. The name of the course was temporarily changed to Sociology 1–2 and was described in the catalogue as including a study of "Anthropology, Astronomy, Bacteriology, Biology, Chemistry, Economics, Embryology, Eugenics, Geography, Histology, Paleontology, Physics, Political Science, Psychology, Psychiatry, Sociology and Statistics!" A modest course fee of $2.50 per semester was charged for text and source material. The text was Chicago University's "Man and His World," a fairly inclusive title, even for such wide topical coverage!

In 1934 President Moody called the author of this article to take charge of the "C.C." Course, and gave him carte blanche to give it in his own way, bearing in mind the stated objectives. At this time the content of the first semester was restricted to a consideration of great upheavals in government and politics, which occurred in the fateful decade beginning in the early 1930's, such as the Democratic landslide of F. D. Roosevelt, the Nazi seizure of power in Germany, the American recognition of Soviet Russia, the Fascist menace in Italy, the war in Ethiopia, and the world-wide problems of the Great Depression. This limited field of topics provided ample material for one semester's work;

The author has been a member of the Middlebury College faculty since 1934. He is a graduate of Denison University and holds a Columbia University Master of Arts degree. In 1950 he was awarded an honorary Doctorate by Denison. Professor Heinrichs is a veteran of World War I and II. During the more recent world conflict he served as an Lieutenant Colonel with the 8th Air Force overseas.

in the second semester Professor Sholes dealt with the scientific problems of our universe. In 1935–36 the science subjects were dropped and the first semester's work was expanded into a full year's course.

Since 1936 the world has cooperated fully (almost too fully) in providing enough major problems and new topics to absorb the full year's time. This was especially true when we began to add the Orient's troubles to the current dilemmas of Western Civilization. The superficiality of treatment, constantly acknowledged by the instructors, was justified, if not authorized, by the catalogue which said, "The Course will be general and not in detail."

Then came the Second World War! In 1943–45 Middlebury was fortunate to secure Associate Professor Pierre deLanux to take charge of "C. C." during the author's absence in England with the Army Air Force. In May 1945 deLanux went from Middlebury to the San Francisco Conference on the United Nations as one of France's technical advisors, and Professor Lawrence E. Leighton, a profound scholar, both in the classical and modern fields, and a former Rhodes Scholar from Bowdoin, was added to the staff.

In 1945 the entire faculty of the Social Sciences Division spent considerable time in mapping out the course which since then has comprised three weekly historical lectures and one conference section devoted to day-to-day developments in national and international affairs as portrayed in The New York Times and The New York Herald Tribune.

In 1949 we added to the staff Thomas H. Reynolds, a veteran of the U. S. Army in the African and Italian Campaigns of 1942–45, and a graduate of Williams College, who is now completing his doctorate in American History at Columbia University. Mr. Leighton and Mr. Reynolds carried on in 1949–50 the methods and traditions of the course while the author was pursuing additional graduate study at Columbia University, on Sabbatical leave, aided by the College's "Walker Furlough Fund."

Today the course objectives are the same, as noted in the catalogues of thirty years ago, but the emphasis and content have steadily changed with the times. Post war peace problems with Germany and Japan, atomic energy control, defense treaties, universal military training, the economic crises of a whole world, the Communist menace, and world organizations for preservation of the peace, are but a few of the "Great Issues" which are placed before Freshmen at Middlebury (as they are before Seniors at Dartmouth!)

The influx of veterans after demobilization in 1945 necessitated an understanding of the very problems in history which some of them had helped to make. To them consideration of the problems which evolved out of World War II seemed far more important in preparing them "to perform intelligently their duties as citizens and members of society," than a consideration of "A Cycle of Cathay."

Thomas H. Reynolds, Instructor in Contemporary Civilization and Professor Heinrichs.

Every freshman reads daily either the Times or the Herald-Tribune for the latest developments in world affairs. The metropolitian dailies consider Middlebury one of the most "news conscious" colleges in the East. The three weekly lectures, revised annually, survey major trends since the Industrial Revolution. Every freshman writes reports on two books per semester, chosen at will from a carefully screened list of over five hundred titles, and attends one of the twelve conference sections into which the class [Continued on page 16] music or dancing, and still others interested in Girl Scout work, all contribute toward making possible our children's program at the Community House. They have an opportunity to try out their theories and gain valuable experience, while the Community House with their help can carry on quite a pretentious program of activities for the youngsters of the village. At the House from Tuesdays through Fridays during the College year we are able to offer, thanks to the Forum, the following schedule for children: Tuesday, 2:00 P.M. Pre-School Dancing Class, 3:30 P.M. Game Day; Wednesday, 3:30 P.M. Arts and Crafts; Thursday, 3:30 P.M. Story Hour; Friday, 3:30 P.M. "Brownie" Scouts.

A very much appreciated and "out-of-this-world" feature of Forum personal service is free piano lessons for any children. Girls from the College Music Department volunteer their services as teachers.

Perhaps the greatest boon to the philanthropic and children's work at the Community House is the Thrift Shop, sponsored by the Forum in conjunction with the management of the Community House. The credit for the idea of the Shop goes to Lee Pockman '42, Rockville Center, N. Y. The idea is this—girls collect cast off clothing in the dormitories, bring it to the Community House and sell it at a minimum figure to people who need the clothing. Money so earned helps out the children's work at the Community House.

The Thrift Shop has become a real institution in Middlebury and rents the basement of a house across from the Community House for its sales. Thrift Shop sales are held every two weeks throughout the College year, except during the Christmas holidays. Townspeople also contribute articles, men's, women's and children's wearing apparel for the Thrift Shop This past year a one excellent collection of clothes was donated by the Men's College. Another "shot-in-the-arm" that the Shop gets once in a while is a box from some loyal Forum "Alum" who, when sorting over her wardrobe, remembers to send the Thrift Shop her castaways.

A total of $1516.83 was taken in at eighteen Thrift Shop sales last year.

Money raised is used to purchase playground equipment for the Community House children. Through the years, a merry-go-round, a jungle gym, a teeter board and other accessories have been acquired. This year a large new steel slide was purchased and installed on permanent foundations.

Funds raised by the Thrift Shop also cares for the Community House grounds in summer, and snow removal in winter. However, the main object of the money is to underwrite the summer play school at the Community House. This school has grown to such an extent that it now requires a paid staff of five, and plenty of supplies and equipment.

The new College year finds Elizabeth Loemker elected president of Women's Forum and new chairmen, familiar with the requirements of their particular phases of the work, are already taking over. The new leaders have been well indoctrinated and are motivated by the same zeal to serve others, old or young, and especially to bring happiness and opportunity to children. It is a worthy organization. Long may it flourish! I am proud of my intimate association with it.

be attached to hard work, sincerity of purpose and the determination to succeed, Israel will emerge as a stabilizing force in the Near East, bringing to that war-torn and long-neglected part of the world new prosperity and new concepts of freedom and democracy.

Yakov Geri, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, boiled the official viewpoint down when he said:

"When I look at the past I am grateful. When I look to the future I am hopeful. But when I look at the present I am concerned."

Oversimplified, Israel's trouble is a surplus of consumers and a deficit of producers. Her trade in 1950 shows serious unbalance, there being 102,000,000 Israeli pounds worth of imports and visible exports of 12,000,000 pounds, with invisible exports, including tourist spending, of 7,000,000 pounds.

Mr. S. Hoffein, chairman of the Bank of Israel, at luncheon told us: "You want to know if we are in a crisis. I haven't known this country without a crisis in the past forty years. President Weizmann once said 'Abnormal is our normal.' Our job is abnormal but we have done it until now. Is it illogical to believe that what we have done we cannot continue to do? Confidence is irrational but you musn't ask mathematical proof of our confidence in the future."

Perhaps the youthful Haganah fighter who was our taxi driver and guide, summarized best the spirit of Israel when, as we stood in the ancient fortress at Acre, he said: "Here Napoleon failed, but we succeeded to conquer."

The students in both of the groups are carefully selected after a summer of study at Middlebury, or in rare cases, upon adequate proof of complete preparation for a year abroad. They are fine young American men and women, with a definite academic and professional purpose, usually teaching or government service, and capable of representing the United States creditably abroad. The group in Paris is slightly smaller this year, due to the smaller number of veterans who have sufficient entitlement left. Of the forty-two in the Paris group, twenty-five are men and seventeen are women; sixteen of the men are on G.I. credits. Six of the students are Middlebury alumni: Constance Bergersen '48, Dorothy Gilligan '51, Louise Planck '48, Gretchen Reger '51, Lois Schawaroch '51, and George Sholes '49. The others come from widely scattered colleges, such as the University of Vermont, Harvard, Union, Rutgers, Barnard, Hamilton, St. Lawrence, Univ. of Delaware, and also Univ. of Wisconsin, Univ. of Missouri, Univ. of Miami, Centre College of Kentucky, Mexico City College—thirty different colleges altogether. They represented fifteen different states—New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania in the lead, but two from California, three from Ohio, one from Wyoming, and two who give their permanent addresses as the Netherlands and Belgium. They have already distinguished themselves academically: six are holders of the U. S. Government Fulbright Scholarships covering full expenses for the year; and five are recipients of the French Government Fellowships awarded through the Institute of International Education in New York.

The Middlebury Director treats them as graduate students, and while giving them all needed advice and guidance, does not interfere with their individual initiative and preferences. Each student is responsible for his own travel arrangements, and his choice of rooming accommodations, the director limiting himself to making suggestions and warning of difficulties. Nine of the women live in the Foyer International near the Sorbonne, where they associate chiefly with French graduate students. Eight men and three women live in the Cité Universitaire, the low-cost "campus" of the University of Paris, about twenty minutes from the Sorbonne. The rest of the group live with private families or occasionally in small hotels on the Left Bank. Many of them eat in the government-subsidized restaurants for students, where adequate food is provided at a cost of about twenty-five cents a meal.

Meetings of the whole group are held at regular intervals, about once a month after the year is well under way, in the headquarters office at Reid Hall, 4 rue de Chevreuse, when common problems and plans are discussed. Special lectures, meetings, or opportunities for reduced rates in theatres and concerts are announced. The whole group was officially received at the Paris City Hall in October, and a "vin d'honneur" offered after the visit. Two all-day excursions have been made, one to Chartres under the leadership of M. Fouchet, of the Musée du Louvre and Visiting Professor at Middlebury in 1949; and one to the city of Rouen. Group visits have been arranged to the United Nations meetings, and plans are in progress for other contacts with the intellectual life of Paris.

The group in Madrid is similarly organized, and its activities follow the same pattern. The most important difference lies in the fact that all the students in the group are not Master's degree candidates. At Madrid, fourteen of the twenty-one students are women and seven are men. Thirteen of the students hold the Bachelor's degree and are candidates for the Master's degree, as in the School in Paris. Since the group is relatively small, it was possible for the Director, Miss de Mayo, also to admit and supervise the advanced studies of three students who already hold the Master's degree in Spanish, and who are now working toward the Middlebury Doctorate in Spanish, either in advanced courses at the university, or in research for a thesis. Besides these three, since there is no Junior Year Group in Spain, such as exists in France and elsewhere, it was deemed feasible to admit five exceptionally well prepared undergraduate students specializing in Spanish. Three of the five are Middlebury College undergraduate Juniors: Mary Jane Bowen '53, Clifford Olson '53, and Iona Shumaker '53. The other two are highly recommended Juniors from Barnard College: Carmen del Rio and Georgia Peyton.

Five of the students in Madrid are using their G.I. credits. There are no Fulbright Scholarships available for Spain, but the Cultural Relations Division of the Spanish State Department has granted four scholarships covering board and room, especially for the Middlebury group. In addition, eight students—four men and four women—were admitted to the fine modern and low-cost Colegios Mayores or student residences of the university. The rest of the students have had the good fortune with our help to find private families where they are entirely happy and in close contact with real Spanish life.

Only one of the graduate students in the Spanish group is a Middlebury alumnus—Whitney Washburn '51. The other students represent Yale, Michigan, Bryn Mawr, Vassar, Univ. of Maryland, Univ. of California at L.A., Georgetown, Univ. of Iowa—sixteen different colleges. They come from sixteen different states—from New York, Maryland, Florida to Iowa, Wyoming, California.

The smaller size of the group at Madrid has facilitated a large number of group excursions and activities. Under the expert and popular guidance of Miss de Mayo, and of Dr. Lafuente, formerly Assistant Curator of the Prado Museum, the group has visited the important museums of Madrid, and also several nearby cities like Segovia and Toledo. The students have attended theatre performances as a group, besides meeting their university professors and other literary figures at teas in the headquarters building where the Middlebury office is located in downtown Madrid, at Miguel Angel 8.

Financially, it is possible for a student by economical living and by taking advantage of reduced rates, to spend a year of graduate study at the University of Paris or Madrid, and to earn a Master's degree under the Middlebury plan, at little more cost than a year of similar study at a large American city university, while enjoying immeasurably greater advantages. From the standpoint of the college, the tuition fee of four hundred dollars paid by each student covers all the costs of his instruction, plus the costs of providing a director and an office for his guidance in the foreign country, together with other operating expenses. The overhead has been kept at a surprisingly low level. These new schools have represented no additional expense to the regular Middlebury College budget.

Middlebury College is at present the only American university which maintains graduate schools in other countries and grants its regular graduate degrees for work done at foreign universities under its direct supervision. The model is there for others to imitate. Once more, Middlebury College is pioneering.

is divided for detailed study of the various occurrences of most recent interest in the national or the international field.

Interestingly enough a confidential, anonymously-answered questionnaire, given to the freshman class at the end of each year, reveals that over 90% of our students have felt for the past ten years, that "C.C." should be continued as a compulsory freshman course for their successors. The author has never been sure whether this is an index of their satisfaction or is the expression of a desire for vicarious revenge!

A book of short stories of life in Middlebury by Alice Brainerd Nelson, '04, daughter of President Ezra Brainerd, has been published by The Vermont Book Shop in Middlebury. Titled FOUR DUCKS ON A POND, the book will be cloth-bound, with attractive pen-and-ink decorations by Arthur K. D. Healy. The seven stories are good enough to stand in their right but the fact that most of them are about President Brainerd's family makes it all the more interesting to Middlebury graduates.

Alumni in the Headlines

Achievments of Loyal Alumnus are Noted by Buffalo Newspaper

This is the story of a 19th century Vermont country boy and a most loyal Alumnus of Middlebury College, who made good in the city as a jurist.

Back in the days following the end of the Civil War an infant was born that was destined to become a prominent jurist in New York State state without ever attending any law school.

The birth occurred in Ferrisburg, Vt. in 1865, and in 1870 the parents of the jurist-to-be moved to Addison, Vt., where he spent his boyhood on a 500-acre farm doing light chores including milking many cows daily.

In 1887 this grass-roots youth took a general course at Middlebury College where he graduated in 1891. During the four-year stay he became the manager of the Campus, college newspaper and editor-in-chief of the Kaleidoscope, annual class book published at the institution.

The study of law began to intrigue him about this time and he went to St. Regis Falls, Franklin County, in New York State where he applied himself diligently in the pursuit of legal knowledge. Then he worked in other law offices in Potsdam and Watertown, continuing to absorb the practical side of legal practice until he passed the state bar association examination in 1894 with flying colors. The test was held in Utica.

"I came to Buffalo then and I couldn't get a job," he said recently. "So I drew on my meager savings and obtained desk space in a law office. Clients were few and far between but I kept plodding and by 1909 I was doing pretty well.

"In 1910," the jurist added, "I was the special representative of the state attorney general in prosecuting violations of the pure food laws. There were about 140 cases but there was a change in political administration in the state while I was trying the batch and I lost out to a Democratic successor."

The Vermont country boy who pulled himself up from grass roots to high judicial office was elected to the Buffalo City Court bench in 1911, serving eight years of a ten-year term before assuming the County Court bench in 1919.

In 1925 he stepped another notch upward, being elected to the New York Supreme Court where he remained for ten years until being obligated to retire by reason of the mandated state 70-year-old regulation.

On last December 17th, this country boy who made good was 86 years old.

Meet Referee Thomas H. Noonan, Secretary of the Class of 1891 and venerable jurist who made the grade the Horatio Alger way.

JOSEPH A. WILSON, '16

A Middlebury man, who has been active in the growth of U.S. air power, from the "Jenny" stage of 1917 to the present, was awarded the Legion of Merit at ceremonies on the eve of his retirement from the Service after 34 years of active duty.

Col. Joseph A. Wilson '16, USAF, veteran of more than 34 years service and 11,200 hours of flying, received the Nation's fifth highest decoration for service as commanding officer of Lages Field in the Azores from July 1948 to January 1950. He is the first United States Air Force officer to complete the cycle of piloting "Jennies" to "Jets."

The presentation was made by Maj. Gen. Lawrence S. Kuter, USAF, commander of the Military Air Transport Service (MATS) at Andrews Air Base.

Colonel Wilson entered the service in August 1917 and is a pioneer of night and instrument flying.

He was assigned to Boston airport in 1925 as assistant commanding officer. At that time the now modern Logan airport consisted of four small steel hangars and a single cinder landing strip about 100 feet wide and 1500 feet long.

Colonel Wilson returned to Logan airport in 1928 and served as commanding officer of the Air Corps detachment there for five years.

Following his retirement on November 30th, Colonel Wilson said of his future plans: "I intend to travel around the world, by air naturally, but this time it is going to be as a passenger and not a pilot." He is now making his home in Honolulu.

Following is the Citation Accompanying Legion Of Merit:

"Colonel Joseph A. Wilson, USAF, distinguished himself by exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding service during the period 16 July 1948 to 12 January 1950. The superior leadership, sound judgement, and diplomacy displayed by Colonel Wilson as Commanding Officer of Lages Field, Azores, contributed immeasureably to the efficient operation of an important military installation and to the continued friendly relationship existing between the United States and Portugal. Colonel Wilson's outstanding achievements reflect great credit upon himself and the United States Air Force."
